TUSCANY, THE LAND OF ETRURIA

renown of its

that the

The territory of Tuscany is considered to be the cradle of Etruscan Civilization, which had its beginnings in the 9th century B.C. and ended in the 1st century A.D., becoming part of the Roman population in accordance with the Lex Iulia of the year 90 A.D..

The Etruscan people had particular qualities which render them, even today, fascinating, mysterious and curiously modern. They were considered the best organized of all the peoples living along the coast of the Tyrrhenian Sea. They were very skilled at exploiting mineral resources, cultivating high quality crops including wine and olive oil, measuring and dividing land, raising livestock, mastering the techniques of hydraulics and drainage, irrigating the fields, as well as excelling in the arts and crafts, sports, and the conduct of their home lives.

The Etruscans went to table "as often as twice a day", while relations between men and women were based on marriage. Women had a clearly defined social role, took part in meals with their husbands, paid great attention to personal appearance, wore jewellery, had a liking for sumptuous garments, went in for fancy hairstyles and wore conspicuous make-up, kept their maiden names when married, had a right to their own tombs and could buy and sell property and inherit it.

Etruscan religion was based on the idea that nature was strictly dependant on the deity. Every event in nature was a sign sent by the deity to mankind, and the duty of latter was to interpret it, discover its meaning and act accordingly.

The places where religious rites were

all the land of Italy, but the sea carried out had to be marked out, circumscribed and consecrated, while the times were regulated by the succession of feast days and ceremonies inscribed in the sacred calendars. In these rites there was ample space for music and dancing, while the prayers might be intended for expiation, thanksgiving or entreaty. Different kinds of animal (oxen, sheep, pigs or fowls) were the victims of sacrifice according to the circumstances; offerings included agricultural produce, wine, cakes and other prepared foodstuffs. There was a widespread custom of votive offerings, including "reproductions" of these in place of the real thing, such as model animals, statues, models of temples and so on.

Among religious practices of particular importance was the cult of the dead.

In the earliest times this was linked to the notion (in common with other Mediterranean cultures) of the continuation of a kind of "active life" of the deceased in his tomb after death. This changed in the course of time to the concept of a "realm of the dead". The shades of the dead made a long descent into this lower world, destined to dwell there for ever, perhaps even in a state of happiness. This new concept gave rise to an ancestor cult, and indeed ancestors became the household gods. The "family tomb" thus became the sacred monument of the family lineage and its history.

The most important small-scale works of art are highly original and show all the main characteristics of Etruscan figurative art in general. Their terracotta and bronze figures represent the outward and decorative element in from the Alps to

as well, stretching devotional practices. In addition there was a copious production of objects in carved ivory and bone (chiefly in the archaic and “oriental” period), and of jewels cut in negative relief in semi-precious stones. Also of great importance was the production of ceramics, in particular the bucchero, which was to become the most characteristic of all Etruscan products. But it is in the line of jewellery that we find the most successful and original works of Etruscan craftsmanship, especially those dating from the mid-7th to the end of the 6th century B.C. Painting in Etruria is found chiefly in tombs and funerary monuments.

Ancient Etruria was centred on a confederation of twelve great Etruscan cities, which included Volterra, Populonia, Chiusi, Arezzo and Cortona.

In Tuscany, Etruscan places, their environments and necropolises, bear splendid witness to this extraordinary civilization, well preserved in archaeological sites and museums.

Itinerary Fiesole Florence

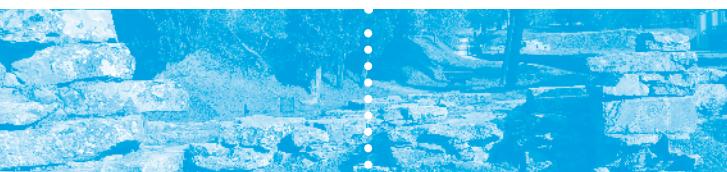

Florence

A number of Etruscan communities had certainly settled on the site of the present city of Florence as early as the Villanovian period. The fertile plains of the Arno were inhabited in very remote times, and the wealthy aristocracy had country houses here and the great tumuli of their burial places, such as the tombs of the Mula and the Montagnola at Quinto Fiorentino.

The Museo Archeologico Nazionale in Florence houses numerous and valuable Etruscan finds from all over Tuscany. It includes a section devoted to the Attic ceramic works often found in Etruscan tombs. Among the outstanding works on display are: the stone cinerary statue, the sarcophagus of Larthia Seianti, the Chimaera of Arezzo, the sarcophagus of the Amazons, the sarcophagus of the Fat Man, the Orator and the François vase.

Fiesole

Was a large city chiefly during the Hellenistic period, when it contained vast temples and was protected by a circuit of walls part of which may still be seen. It had business relations with the town of Volterra and boasted numerous fine ceramic workshops. The archaeological area contains a reconstruction of the entrance to an Etruscan tomb, the public baths, the Etruscan walls and the ground-plan of a single-chambered Etruscan temple. In the Archaeological Museum are a great number of finds dating from the Early Bronze Age to the Roman era.

Itinerary On the slopes of the Montalbano

The Etruscan places to be found in and around the area of the Montalbano were in an ideal position to control the trade routes which led from the port of Pisa to the plains of the lower Arno, and thence diverged towards the Po valley to the north and inland Etruria (Volterra, Chiusi) to the south.

On the ground floor of the Villa Ferdinandea, the Museo Archeologico displays finds from the excavations carried out at the ancient Etruscan settlement of Artimino. Of special interest is the black terracotta censor discovered in the entranceway to Tumulus C at Prato Rosello.

At Comeana the Tumulus of Montefortini and the Tomba dei Boschetti are both worth a visit.

Larciano castello has a municipal museum containing Etruscan finds.

The Municipal Museum of Fucecchio also displays a number of Etruscan objects.

Montelupo Fiorentino

The Archeological and Ceramic Museum, which houses Etruscan objects from the necropolis at La Falsettaia and the village of Montereggi.

At Capraia e Limite the Museo archeologico di Montereggi contains Etruscan remains.

Of special interest is a visit to the Area Archeologica di Pietramarina, a locality occupied by the Etruscans as early as the 7th century B.C.. Here to be found is the Masso del Diavolo, probably an ancient cult site.

itinerary From Volterra to the outskirts of Siena

The Etruscan city of Volterra (Velathri) stands on a hilltop in a fine commanding position. The splendour of the city reached its peak at the end of the Hellenistic period (2nd to 1st centuries B.C.), shortly before it became Romanized.

The Museo Guarnacci houses one of the most important Etruscan collections in all Italy. Among the items which visitors simply must see are the Kyathos, the stele of Avile Tite, the Lorenzini marble head, and the over 600 funerary urns in terracotta, tufa and alabaster. Among the bronze statuettes is the famous Ombra della Sera (Shadow of the Evening). The Etruscan-Roman necropolis is also of great interest.

The town of San Gimignano has ancient Etruscan origins, even though it reached its peak during the period of the medieval Communes. A branch of the ancient Via Francigena passed through it. The Museo Archeologico houses both Etruscan-Roman and medieval material.

Certaldo

A town of Etruscan origin, was the birthplace of Giovanni Boccaccio. A section of the museum is devoted to Etruscan and Roman objects discovered in the environs.

Capannoli

An archaeological documentary display centre containing funerary urns and objects, as well as the reproduction of an Etruscan tomb found at Montevaso.

Terricciola

The Etruscan necropolis of Terricciola consisting of 16 tombs.

Montaione

Museo Comunale containing archaeological, palaeontological, mineral and fossil finds.

Itinerary The Etruscan Coast

Pisa and Populonia were the two great ports of southern Etruria. We find other settlements on or near the coast at Castiglioncello, Vada, Cecina, Casale Marittimo, Montescudaio, Volterra, Piombino and Campiglia Marittima.

Populonia Archaeological Park

An especially rich archaeological area, situated in the gulf of Baratti. In the Etruscan and Roman eras it was of the first importance for the trading and working of iron from the mines on the island of Elba. The smelting of hematite from Elba reached such a pitch as to lead to the building of a whole industrial zone, while the mass of slag ended up covering over a large part of the ancient burial grounds. Open to visitors are the necropolises of San Cerbone-Casone and Le Grotte, as well as the “acropolis” of Populonia. The tombs are numerous, dating from various periods and constructed in different ways.

Piombino

Museo Archeologico with a large collection of articles found in the district and funerary objects from the tombs of Populonia.

Cecina

Museo Archeologico containing Etruscan finds. Special mention may be made of the exceptional objects from the necropolis of Casale Marittimo, the jewellery from Belora and the cinerary urn from Montescudaio.

Rosignano Marittimo

An archaeological museum containing funerary objects from various necropolises, architectural fragments and grave goods.

Arezzo

According to the geographer Strabo, the ancient city of Arezzo in the north-east part of Etruria was the most inland of the great Etruscan cities.

The archaeological finds preserved in the Museo Archeologico Nazionale "Gaio Cilnio Mecenate" bear witness to the importance of the city and surrounding territory in the Etruscan period.

Cortona

An important Etruscan centre, Cortona still retains the ancient city walls dating back to the 5th-4th centuries B.C. Palazzo Casali houses the Museo dell'Accademia Etrusca, where the two most characteristic objects are the so-called lampadario (chandelier) di Cortona and the tabula cortonensis (the Cortona Tablet). Outside the town are the necropolises, which include five tombs of great interest.

Chiusi

Named Clevisin in Etruscan, this was one of the leading cities of Northern Etruria.

Here we find some 15 painted tombs, the Labirinto di Porsenna (Labyrinth of Porsenna), and the Museo Archeologico Nazionale di Chiusi.

Chianciano Terme

The museum houses the largest collection of Etruscan canopic vases, anthropomorphic ossuaries dating from the 7th century B.C. Remarkable also are the Frontone dei Fucoli which adorned a 2nd-century Etruscan temple and the gorgeous tomb of an Etruscan prince, dating from the 7th century B.C..

Sarteano

Interesting for the famous Tomba della Quadriga Infernale (infernal chariot) discovered in 2003 in the necropolis of the Pianacce, and for the Museo Civico Archeologico which houses important Etruscan remains.

Itinerary Through the Maremma

The Maremma may be considered the cradle of Etruscan civilization, in view of the wealth of archaeological sites bearing witness to the presence of this people over the entire area.

Massa Marittima - Parco Archeologico del Lago dell'Accesa.

The remains of an Etruscan settlement divided into districts, each with its own group of buildings and its own burial ground.

Area Archeologica di Roselle or Rousellae, one of the Twelve Cities of Etruria, extended as far as Vetulonia. As a fortress guarding the mouth of the River Ombrone, it was at its peak in the 6th-5th centuries B.C..

Vetulonia was an important Etruscan centre, due to the Colline Metallifere (Metalliferous Hills) and the fortunate location on the ancient Lake Prile. Open to visitors today are the well organized modern museum and the tombs of the Diavolino and the Pietrera.

The remains of the ancient city of Cosa preserve impressive remnants such as the massive walls and a canal, known as the Tagliata Etrusca, which served to prevent the harbour from silting up.

In the Parco Archeologico Città del Tufo (Cities of Tufa) may be found the impressive vie cave, tunnels cut through the rock to link up the ancient villages of Sovana, Sorano and Pitigliano, as well as a number of burial sites including the monumental Tomba Ildebranda.

Interesting archaeological sites open to visitors include: Chiaccio Forte (Scansano), Talamonaccio (Orbetello), Poggio Tondo (Scarlino).

Other finds of archaeological interest may be found in the museums of Grosseto, Vetulonia, Massa Marittima, Pitigliano, Saturnia, Scansano, Ansedonia and Orbetello.

So powerful was Etruria that the renown of its name spread not only over all the land of Italy, but the sea as well, stretching from the Alps to the Straits of Sicily.

Titus Livius
